To Whom It May Concern,

On behalf of the Asia Pacific Centre for the Responsibility to Protect Director and team I highly recommend Neil Bouchard a highly motivated student.

I confirm that I am serving as his coordinating supervisor during his voluntary internship with the Asia-Pacific Centre for the Responsibility to Protect at the University of Queensland, Brisbane, Australia. He began the internship on June 9, 2026, and by September 4, 2026, will have completed approximately 176 hours. It will continue into 2027, concluding at a time of the volunteer's choosing.

Concurrently to undertaking the internship, he is enrolled at The University of Queensland in a Masters in International Relations. He has demonstrated advanced academic capability and is on track to graduate with an outstanding academic record (current GPA 6.16) at the end of semester 2, 2026. His academic standing and additional curricular activities made him an ideal fit for him to be considered to undertake this internship at the Centre.

Neil was tasked with conducting research for a project investigating the nexus between multinational corporations and atrocity crimes. Specifically, his assignment was to document two significant cases in which multinational corporations and/or their officials have been investigated or prosecuted for atrocity crimes — whether through domestic courts, universal jurisdiction proceedings, or other regulatory enforcement mechanisms such as sanctions — for inclusion in our dataset. The project demands a high degree of accuracy and sound professional judgment, and Neil has demonstrated a strong aptitude for translating research findings into rigorous and clear documentation.

He has liaised effectively with academics, displaying enthusiasm and quickly building strong working relationships. He is working closely with our Atrocity Prevention Analyst, Dr Xuwan Ouyang. This important task, involving research, the sourcing of grey literature, and the production of a findings report. He has demonstrated strong attention to detail and effective time management skills.

Yours sincerely,
